FAQ - 6

Scenario 1:

Company 'A' supplies materials (self-manufactured or procured) to Company 'B' for conversion and pays conversion/job work charges for job work operations.

OR

Company 'B' procures materials on behalf of Company 'A' and does the job work operation. Company 'A' pays conversion/job work charges and also reimburses Company 'B' for materials procured.

The production may be cleared by Company 'B' by paying Excise Duty on behalf of Company 'A' which is reimbursed by Company 'A'. The production is recorded in the books of Company 'A'. Company 'B' may or may not be distributing the final product directly to the consumer on behalf of Company 'A'.

Company 'A' will be covered under the cost accounting records rules. Company 'B' engaged in job work operations without the use of own materials and receiving only job work or conversion charges is not covered under the cost accounting records rules.

Scenario 2:

Company B manufactures the product with the use of own materials (self-manufactured or procured) and sells to Company A. Company A sells it to the consumers under its own Brand name. In the process, Company A incurs brand building expenses, selling and distribution expenses and other overheads. Company B may or may not be distributing the final product directly to the consumer on behalf of Company A.

Company B, being the manufacturer, will be covered under the cost accounting records rules. Company A will also be covered under cost accounting records rules since the company is undertaking brand building operations and is doing value addition to the product while selling to the ultimate consumer as a unique product.

Scenario 3:

Company B manufactures the product with the use of own materials (self-manufactured or procured) and sells to Company A. Company A sells it to the consumers as it is, i.e., without any further value addition.

Company B, being the manufacturer, will be covered under the cost accounting records rules. Company A being a pure trader will not be covered under cost accounting records rules.

Notes:

- a) In all the above cases, "cost accounting records rules" means Companies (Cost Accounting Records) Rules 2011 or any of the cost accounting records rules notified for 6 Regulated Industries.
- b) The applicability will depend on the companies meeting the threshold limits prescribed in the Rules.
